FEATURING PHIL CHALMERS

Phil Chalmers is a true crime writer, law enforcement trainer, youth culture specialist and a television personality. He is the author of several books, including "Inside the Mind of a Teen Killer" and "True Lies." He has been researching homicide and interviewing offenders for 30 years, and his work has been featured on dozens of television shows and networks, including A&E's "Killer Kids" and Fox's "Crime Watch Daily." He has interviewed over 200 killers face to face including teen killers, school shooters, mass murderers and serial killers. His current project is a book and television show about serial killers and solving cold cases. He resides in Sarasota, Florida and is married to a middle school teacher, Wendi.

Plenary Session: Homicide in America

Chalmers will be addressing the causes, warning signs and triggers of teen killers, school shooters, mass murderers and serial killers. In a fast-paced and hard-hitting training style, he will discuss dozens of causes and display hundreds of crime scene photos and videos, teaching attendees not only what makes teen killers, school shooters, mass murderers and serial killers tick, but also how to stop them by learning the causes, warning signs and triggers of these killers. Unlike most experts, authors and trainers, Chalmers talks directly with the killers themselves along with getting the first person crime scene perspective from the investigators who have worked these cases.

Topics covered include:

- Causes, warning signs and triggers of Teen Killers and School Shooters
- Dangerous Youth Culture, including cop-killing music, violent video games and dangerous social media and phone apps
- The latest trends in mass murder and serial murder, and the new profile.

FEATURING

*Linda
Chamberlain,
PhD, MPH*

Dr. Chamberlain, an epidemiologist specializing in childhood exposure to violence and brain development, is the founding director of the Alaska Family Violence Prevention Project and a consultant for the Family Violence Prevention Fund. An internationally renowned keynote speaker, Dr. Chamberlain is known for her ability to translate science into practical information with diverse audiences. Her passionate belief that everyone can make a difference conveys a message of hope and opportunity. Dr. Chamberlain holds faculty appointments at the University of Alaska and Johns Hopkins University. She earned her public health degree from Yale School of Medicine and her doctorate from Johns Hopkins. Dr. Chamberlain has published extensively and is editor for the e-journal, Family Violence Prevention and Health Practice. She serves on the National Advisory Board for the Institute for Safe Families. Awards and recognition for her work include a National Kellogg Leadership Fellowship. Living on a rural homestead outside of Homer, Alaska with her husband and dog team, she has developed a highly innovative lecture series on leadership and teamwork called "Lessons from the Trail" and teaches a graduate course on public health and leadership. For her first book, "Arctic Inspirations," she traveled from Alaska through Northern Canada and on to Siberia to gather stories of women starting businesses in the Arctic. She is currently working on a book, "Mushing the Mail on the Iditarod Trail."

Plenary Session: A Trauma-Informed Approach to Children Exposed to Violence

The brain's capacity to adapt and change in response to environment helps us to understand the enhanced vulnerability of a child's developing brain to potentially toxic stressors such as domestic violence and also the pathways to resilience and healing. This plenary examines the predictable and preventable physical, mental, behavioral, and cognitive challenges associated with childhood exposure to domestic violence. Dr. Chamberlain highlights common characteristics of evidence-based interventions for children exposed to domestic violence and practical strategies that help children to heal and thrive.

*Monique
Morrow, PhD*

Monique Marrow holds a doctorate degree in Child Clinical Psychology from Ohio State University. She is a member of the National Child Traumatic Stress Network (NCTSN) and currently serves as an Instructional Leader for the Center for Trauma Recovery and Juvenile Justice at the University of Connecticut, and as training specialist for the University of Kentucky Center on Trauma and Children. Both Centers focus on the training and dissemination of trauma focused interventions for youth in the Juvenile Justice system or at risk for involvement in the system. Dr. Marrow has also served on NCTSN's Steering Committee, Affiliate Advisory Board, Community Violence, Complex Trauma and Justice Consortium Committees. She is currently co-chair for the Juvenile Justice Treatment Sub-Committee and co-authored a training curriculum with members of this committee entitled "Think Trauma: a training for staff in Juvenile Justice and Residential Settings."

Plenary Session: Why is Complex Trauma Relevant and What Do You Want Me to Do About It?

This plenary session will focus on defining complex trauma and its influence on the developmental trajectory of youth. It will also provide a brief overview of what it means to be trauma responsive and what that can look like across multiple youth serving environments.

Empowering Resiliency and Self-Regulation through Mind-Body Connection Practices

For the clients you serve (especially girls) external resources and support can be limited and often fall short of providing what is needed. Research shows that lasting resiliency and healing must come from the inside out. Unfortunately, our culture does not readily teach or demonstrate to us how to do this. Fortunately, we have access to and understanding of time tested, ancient practices of breath work, yoga, aromatherapy and presence to support self-regulation, self-care, resiliency and healing. These practices have been shown to help regulate and influence the stress response (fight or flight), calm the mind and facilitate more balance and harmony.

Join us for this interactive and experiential workshop to learn every day practices and principles based on these modalities that you can take back to the field and use to support your clients (and yourself!).

Equity - Competent Social Justice Leadership - Systems for Restoring Our Youth

This session is a working session for youth organization and agency leaders. Open discussion citing specific examples of best practices of departments, divisions, and/or organizations that prove successful alternative practices for youth with at-risk behaviors. Participants are asked to bring brief success tactics to share with others. Additional discussion will center on practices and/or traditions within these areas where (un)conscious barriers might impede access and/or success of youths whose experience place them in at-risk conditions. Session will conclude with recommendations that might aid leaders in improving their divisions/departments/organizations in assessing better processes for equity.

The Intersections between Domestic Violence and Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACEs): A Toolkit

Domestic violence and other Adverse Childhood Experiences are highly interconnected. The Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACEs) research has revolutionized our understanding of the cumulative effects of multiple forms of trauma as leading causes of physical, mental, cognitive and behavioral health challenges across the lifespan. This workshop will introduce a Toolkit, informed by research in Alaska and Finland, that examines domestic violence and ACEs within a resilience framework to promote collaboration and enhance the effectiveness of services for families. The Toolkit, an open access educational resource is designed to be used by domestic violence service providers and other community partners to examine how domestic violence and ACEs are connected; provide tools to understand the effects of childhood trauma and identify tools and practical strategies for families experiencing adversities.

“For Ahkeem”

Judge Jimmie
Edwards,
Director of Public Safety,
St. Louis

'For Ahkeem' is the coming-of-age story of Daje Shelton, a seventeen-year-old African American girl from north St. Louis. Expelled from her public high school, Shelton is sent to the court-supervised Innovative Concept Academy (ICA), which offers her a last chance to earn a high school diploma. The film follows Shelton for two years, as she struggles to maintain focus in school, attends the funerals of friends killed around her, navigates a loving-but-tumultuous relationship with her mother, and falls in love with a classmate named Antonio. As her boyfriend is drawn into the criminal justice system and events in Ferguson shine a national spotlight on racial bias and poor community-police relationships, Shelton learns that she is pregnant and must contend with the reality of raising a young African American boy. This film illuminates the challenges that many African American teenagers face today, but it also witnesses the strength, resilience, and determination it takes for Shelton to overcome obstacles in her community and graduate from high school."
