Cassie Tavorn, EdD is a professional educator, consultant, and advocate for many years. Dr. Tavorn's research examines the life narratives and experiences of teens, whose lives were under-resourced. Her interviews and path-planning activities with White rural teens, BIPOC urban populations, and their families, have aided them through navigating college and/or trade school opportunities. She takes pleasure in connecting juveniles with challenging social and academic skills, to higher hopes for their futures.

PRESENTATION SYNOPSIS: Post Secondary Opportunities for Juvenile Minor Offenders – trade schools, community college, universities – there is still hope for a future, including those in detention and residential centers.
